План курса:

Discussion Skills

This course aims to develop students' competence in both participating in and leading a small scientific research team. During the sessions, students focus on critical thinking skills while identifying the issues of a written article or a debate presented in a number of articles or oral speeches, presentations, etc. They analyse the issues, and choose their own position, discussing it with others. Forming a group, they have to develop their argument and the supporting evidence and finally prepare to meet their opponents and lead an open debate of their own.

Students practice oral skills including debate, discussion, and persuasion skills as part of the critical thinking skills, as well as communication skills among members of a group. They learn to be tolerant and capable of understanding and respecting other people's ideas and views.

The topics for discussions are chosen by the students from the relevant and updated resources, media or press. The focus is on social and cultural issues.

English for Specific Academic Purposes (ESAP)

English for Practical Psychology

The course module aims at developing students' reading, listening, comprehension and reproduction skills through a variety of activities based on authentic texts (written and recorded) of both descriptive and analytical nature covering major areas of general, developmental and applied psychology. Students are encouraged to practice the above mentioned skills and to acquire core psychological vocabulary mainly through reading and listening activities. Thus, the course has a double purpose: students are expected to enhance not only their language command, but also their overall professional knowledge.
