Sustainability, Art and Nature as parts of a coherent whole

What is sustainability?

* the ability to meet the needs of present generations – nations and individuals – without compromising the ability of future generations to meet theirs.

"We do not inherit the Earth from our ancestors; we borrow it from our children"

"The greatest threat to our planet is the belief that someone else will save it"

Our world can be considered to be sustainable as long as art, nature and sustainability successfully co-exist.

It will happen if and only if every single thing we create and every single step forward we take is consistent with all the value patterns and environmental concerns a sustainable modern society should posses.

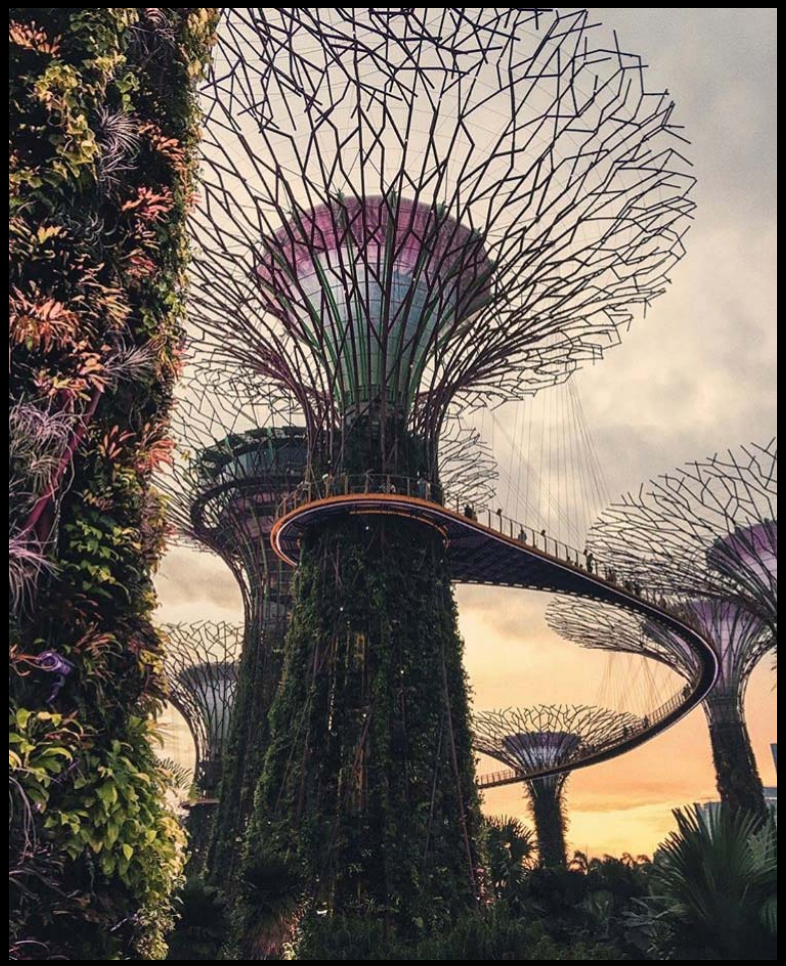
Gardens by the Bay, Singapore



Durmitor National Park, Montenegro

Earth provides enough to satisfy our needs, but unfortunately not enough to satisfy our greed.

“Defend whatever cannot defend itself”

To draw a silly but funny face on a trash bin is the smallest thing we can do to make a big difference, isn’t it?

Sustainability is an art of being able to keep balance between our needs and the needs of the nature.

When these requirements are met and the interests of people and nature co-exist successfully, that's where sustainability comes into it in its truest sense.

Sustainability is the responsibility of each individual every single day.
