Task 7

There are a lot of reasons to hate living in big cities. For example: constant traffic on roads, not enough parking space or lots. It may just be an overall polluted, crowded and noisy city. The architecture in big cities might be quite unusual too, there might be a lot of banners and advertisements all around. On there could be more personal reasons. Some people may just prefer a quiet little city instead.

Task 8

Looking at the provided diagram, I can tell that social medias are taking over young minds. Seventy three percent of teens are on social medias, twenty two percent of which log on to facebook more than ten times a day. With the popularisation of the internet teens found a new way to communicate with each other. The average teen on facebook has two hundred and one friends. Some of those teens might be socially active in real life, and some might not.

But what about other audience? Well, 25% of facebook users are under the age of ten. This fact might sound either really bad or really good to you.

On one hand, it's a whole new era, and new internet cultures. But on the other, internet may lead people the wrong way, away from the real culture. Whatever the future had planned for us, it will be interesting.
