Task 7

Some people hate living in big cities because it might be stressful. One of the reasons why is the lack of fresh air and vitamins which can cause long-lasting depression. Another reason is the speed pace of life. In such conditions it's almost impossible to take a deep breath. To add to it, it's way harder to book a table in a restaurant or rent a house in a big city due to high prices and overpopulation.

Task 8

In the diagram we can see that 73% of teens are on social networks, ^{and} 37% send messages to their friends every day. To my mind, that's because social networks have become the main source of socialization recently.

Nowadays, teenagers don't always have time to hang out with their friends. The education system makes them spend all day studying, and hypothetically, they use social networks as a replacement of real-life conversations.

The diagram also shows that 25% of Facebook users are under the age of 10. Actually, this number is connected to parents creating accounts for their children who start to become curious about the world around them. In some ways, Facebook is a source of useful information. Moreover, it lets you know ^{about} the latest world news, the life of your friends. That's why 22% of teenagers log on to Facebook over 10 times per day. That's all I wanted to say.
