Task 7

Living in a big city could be ~~un~~ unpleasant for those who dislike crowded places and lots of people in general. Introverts, for example. Also, traveling around the big city usually takes an unfairly huge amount of time. That makes people wake up earlier to ^{at least} ~~just~~ arrive ^{to work} on time, which's not to everyone's liking as well. And the last to add, living in a big city is considered expensive by those who moved there from smaller towns or villages.

Task 8

Diagram shows that a high number of teens are on social networks, which I don't see as a problem, since they can be used to seek information, as the whole Internet is used. It's also seen that more than a half of teens use social media at least every day or even more often. It could badly effect their eyes health and daily time managment, if not controlled by teens themselves or by their parents.

I also think that the age of a person and what kind of platform they use have a strong matter in this sphere. For example, only 8% of American teens use Twitter, which is still concerning, since there're disturbing topics discussed on it.

One forth of Facebook users is under the registration age, which is problematic. A teen has 201 online friends on average. But who are those people and ~~what~~ what could they do to your child?
