WS8

This essay looks at the pie chart, demonstrating daily activities which are most preferable among teenagers.

To begin with, it is clear from the diagram that majority of teenagers prefer spending their time in bed. This could be the consequence of big amount of schoolwork, excessive daily screentime or mental disorders, inherent for teenagers as their mental system is still developing at this age.

Moreover, 15% of those who took part in the survey devote most of their daily time to studying and doing homework. This could result from fears of disappointing parents and falling exams, and teachers putting too much pressure on immature minds of young generation, threatening them with bad grades and time limits.

Also, it is worth mentioning that most of the modern generation does not commit to daily physical exercises, as there is a lot of distracting points, such as videogames, social medias and fast food.

All things considered, it is safe to assume that nowadays, teenagers mostly suffer from poor sleep schedule, mental health and obesity, which are mostly the consequences of unhealthy diet, insufficient physical activity, excessive screentime and big amount of schoolwork.
