The Day Everything Went Wrong (But Ended Right)

It was hell of a day. Yet, it was also the best day in my career.

I had been working in a small company for a couple of months back then. Actually, I hated that job, it was ~~very~~ exhausting. One day I had to present my long-term project to the team. My boss told me that my future in the company depended on this presentation, so I was pretty nervous. Well, not as nervous as I was that morning, when I woke up only to find out that my alarm clock had broken down and I was late for the meeting. I rushed to my car, but, oh God, I forgot my keys. 2

By the time I arrived at my office I had wasted ~~20~~ 20 minutes. I was finally heading for the meeting room, when some guy spilt his coffee all over my shirt!

Late, upset and tidy I started my speech, picturing how my boss would fire me. When I finished, everybody was applauding. My boss was so impressed that he even promoted me!

Now, ^{trust me,} even if everything seems bad, I ~~believe that~~ ^{trust me,} in the end ^{it} everything will be alright.
