Task 1:

1. The central character of the story is the boy named Rohan and he was notorious for his laziness and lack of ambition.
2. The habit of the boy was procrastination.
3. Curiosity got Rohan upon hearing about the arrival of Mr. Gupta.
4. Mr. Gupta was sitting on a branch of a large tree when Rohan approached him for guidance.
5. Mr. Gupta used an analogy: he asked the boy to imagine lifetime as an hour-glass, each grain of sand of which as a precious, heart-revealing moment. Mr. Gupta emphasized the fact that every time Rohan procrasti-noted, he lost the grain, and if he goes on, in the end he will be left with nothing but the dreamy feeling of consuming regret.

6. Lessons learned by the villagers were as such:

- 1) To cherish every moment that brings positive feeling/mood
- 2) To value the true power of time — an opportunity to spend time with the loved ones

7. Village's state of affairs shifted to positive direction by virtue of Rohan inspiring villagers to perceive time the same way he was taught by Ma Gupta.

8. Story emphasized the change in one's destiny about the importance of time. In some case, Rohan realized that every time he procrastinated, he wasted an opportunity of facing something marvelous; he got motivated and after making progress in becoming better version of himself he finally became an honour ^{the} of village.

9. Before Rohan reflected on his past deeds and suddenly realizing ^{ed} how childish and blatantly stupid his decisions were, he ^{had} procrastinated and ~~had~~ been wasting time all over the place, achieving nothing. In conclusion we can state that ^{Rohan's} understanding of the time changed a lot, and, in fact, positively.

10. The ultimate lesson is concluded within understood time's value and motivating yourself to become better and better, enhancing your abilities and slowly, but surely creating a path to success by virtue of following Rohan's new principles.

Task 7.

The first reason that comes to my mind is the noisiness of the city, its perpetual action and haste, overwork business.

This can easily be overwhelming, especially if we compare city life to countryside,
where living is calmer and steadier, people are chillier and everything seems far less restrictive. ~~8~~

Secondly, the air quality in the city is detrimental to your health by virtue of factories emitting toxic fumes and gases into the atmosphere.

Task 8.

Social networks have become a giant part of our daily life, as now we can access an enormous amount of activities and information by simply doing a couple of clicks. As a result of this technological burst, people's demand in gadgets and applications has recently increased.

Analyzing the presented diagram, we can clearly state that teens and children are also becoming inclined to the usage of ~~so~~ such sources, and the first and foremost reason is overall accessibility to these gadgets, and not only that, but also how intriguing and captivating this information can be, to the point when using phone becomes an addiction.

In conclusion, the growth of social networking is reasonable, as each year more people have access to internet and social networks are the most entertaining information sources.
