Well, there are a lot of reasons to hate living in the countryside. There is almost no internet connection, so it is very boring. Living in the countryside might be very lonely, there is almost no one to talk to. You could also have a lot of chores: water the plants, clean the roof, paint the fence. There are also ~~totally only~~ almost no shops near, you would have to travel very long distances to buy food.

Yearly ~~the~~ daily activities for teenagers change. It happens because people's interests and technology are changing. As technology gets more advanced the younger generation adapts to it. For example: before the Internet was invented teenagers spent some of their time on reading and going outside, but now almost everyone is using phones and other gadgets around 30% of their time, while studying at school or doing homework takes only 15%. Time that teenagers spend sleeping decreases rapidly as half of them stand up all night. But some teenagers look after themselves since they spend 10% of their time on something useful - sports. The last 15% of teenagers' time is spent on eating.

In conclusion we can see that over the past century daily activities for teenagers have changed massively: time for sleeping, sports and for studying has decreased, while much more time is spent on using gadgets or the Internet.
