Now, now, I know how cliché that sounds, but I'm being real here.

When I woke up that day, the first thing I did was accidentally bang my head on the shelf above my bed, that I've meditated to remove and attach somewhere else (It's ^{still} there, if you're wondering. My laziness knows no bounds.)

After I successfully checked the shelf's structural integrity ^{with my forehead} I proceeded to look at the ^{alarm} clock and realised that I was running late to my job. I only had time ^{for getting} to get a quick (TOLD! Turns out my neighbors screwed up the boiler that day somehow) shower and ~~brushing~~ brushing my teeth. No coffee or breakfast at all since I was in a rush. When I sprang outside I almost fell off ^{the stairs,} but managed to keep my balance with the help of the railings. When I got into my car I've realized that I've forgotten to get more gas yesterday the day before, so I didn't have enough to drive to work and had to stop at a gas station first. After finally reaching my workplace I noticed a car of cars parked around it, but I didn't give any thought. Upon entering the building I'm greeted by my boss, who asked me about what am I doing here. In an instant I remembered that everyone in our office got an extra day off that I've forgotten about previously. In order to not look like an idiot I told him that I'm there to work overtime. He gave me a raise!
