Task 7.

A Friend of mine once said she hated living in the ~~count~~ countryside. I can understand why. First, places far from cities usually have a low population count, so it can be hard to find friends there. It can also be amusingly boring to live there: there are no cinemas, shopping centres and other ~~entertainment~~ places for entertainment. Sometimes villages and small towns can be dirty or dangerous too. You can feel stuck in the past there.

Task 8.

It seems that teenagers prefer spending time to quite lazily nowadays. According to the analytics, they spend only twenty five per cent of their free time on either doing sports or studying. The rest of a day is commonly used for social media apps, sleeping or playing videogames. Why are their daily activities sorted like that? The answer can be rather simple. The most disappointing theory is that they're just lazy. The ~~most~~ modern teenagers have a quite comfortable and ~~chilling~~ life and aren't used to ~~working hard~~ ^{hardwork}. That's because they no longer have to work since their early years as it was in the nineteenth century and earlier. They are not asked to do much and would rather chat with their friends online instead of ~~gaining~~ ^{studying} skills and intelligence.

Meanwhile, some of them can be just simply confused about what they should do with their life. Such people ~~just need~~ ^{just need} support and inspiration from elders to ~~know how to managing~~ ^{start} time effectively.
