Tasks

Two weeks ago I applied for the job as the manager of finance to the bank. As I was announced to have a job interview, I was over the moon, so I went shopping to buy a classic suit and and a white blouse.

The night before I went to bed early. Waking up at 6 a.m. was a sort of challenge for me, yet I managed to do it. Then I made a delectable breakfast and in high spirits went outside.

Everything was going smooth until the car, driving past me, hadn't left me soaking wet. My clothes were spoilt, and I was extremely frustrated. I went home to change into my casual clothing and opted to set off for the job interview without any desire.

At the interview nobody paid much attention to my appearance. I answered the interviewer's questions fluently. We even laughed our heads off when I told him about my morning accident. Later that day I was accepted to work at the bank.

In conclusion, I'd say that each frustrating moment of life can turn out to be the first step towards success.
