As we were going, I ~~at~~ started noticing houses and trees I've never seen before. I asked my dad: "Are you sure that we are going right way?" He said that his friend had advised him a shorter road. I was satisfied by this reply, but spoiler: I shouldn't have to. After another endless four hours I caught a hint of hesitation in my father's eyes, it's obviously not a good sign. I asked if he knew where we were and his anxiety was quite talkative. I suggested to use our phones to find way back, and it would be an amazing idea, if there was any network. After five minutes of pure panic we recalled that we can find the closest market and ask for navigations. Thank you to 'Twenty four hours products at BoB's' - you've saved our lives.
