Second, for people who like the silence and serenity of nature, the atmosphere of a big city could seem suffocating. That's why your friend hates places like that.

Task 9.

1) museum 3) school 5) homework.
 2) desk 4) exam

Task 8.

The diagram that is shown here shows that 73% of teens are on social networks, which is really not that surprising. After all, social media or social networks are so popular because they're a great tool for collecting information about the world around you and meeting new people.

I think that with time even more teens will start to use social media, although they'll probably shift to other apps.

If right now 22% of teenagers log on to Facebook, in a few years it can be Twitter instead. It's ^{only} a matter of time, because of Facebook's moderation.

Same goes to sending messages to friends. In the future even more than 37% of teens will do that. It's easy, does not take much time and super convenient too.

What I want to say is: the statistics will grow and there's nothing to be done about it.

except just living on.
