Oliver was in his element with routine, yet once in a blue moon, he wondered if playing it safe was wise. If he had taken more risks earlier, perhaps he wouldn't feel so stuck now. He had always trusted the system, but the polite dismissal of his last proposal had been the final straw. That email, though, suggested a path he had never considered before, making him question everything.

Paragraph 4:

He has been trying to make ends meet for years, never truly thriving. By any large, his cautious approach had left him financially secure but unfulfilled. Never before has he felt such a pull towards the unknown. The safe choice now seemed pathetic compared to the dizzying possibility of reinvention. This internal debate was exhausting his spirit, therefore, Oliver decided to do something with it.

Paragraph 6:

Oliver now saw the posh office for what it was - a facade. He can still hear their reluctant, vague answers when he asked about funding. They are constantly dodging direct questions which is utterly irritating. He realized they expected him to take advantage of his contacts without fair compensation. Walking away felt really difficult, but it was of utmost importance for his integrity.
