RAWDON: Rebecca, hi. The weather is astonishingly terrific today. I want to go somewhere.

REBECCA: Really? So do I. Sadly, I don't have a foggiest idea about a destination.

RAWDON: Rollercoasters may be? A new one opened nearby.

REBECCA: Rawdon, I am scared of them. They look way too bloody. I really doubt rollercoasters are reliable enough.

RAWDON: Reliable as I am!

REBECCA: Ready to go without me then?

RAWDON: Risk is entailed to have fun, so yes. See you.

REBECCA: Risky you! Good luck there.

Flat to let.

In contemporary time, "flat to let" is a ^{common} ~~popular~~ text for apartment rent advertising. I might see it on the Internet, especially on the sites related with rent topic.

Such advertisement refers to people currently looking for a temporary or permanent place to stay. It lets them to know about an available option, its location and its price.

People might take into consideration this advertisement because it sharply gives people all needed information about a flat and lures them with a minimalistic and understandable title.
