Task 4:

Paragraph 2:

At first, Clara turned a blind eye to the offer since she was skeptical about its benefits. However, as the school day went by, the idea of studying abroad has been at the back of her mind. She realized that if she were a university admissions officer, she would've prioritised students who have completed a rigorous program since sooner or later they will be faced with a plethora of academic challenges.

Paragraph 4:

Clara was on the verge of quitting since she feared that her classmates would judge her for being a nerd. However, she knew that this step ~~must~~ ~~be~~ had to be taken. The school decided to hold a math exam to determine the ultimate winner. Everyone knew that it was Clara's weakest side, but she arranged a hectic study routine and completed the test in one go. Later she learned that she did get accepted. → (continued later)

~~Paragraph 6~~: Task 5:

1. Level-headed — calm, grounded, rational, and unaffected by anxiety, despite being placed in challenging circumstances.

Task 7:

1. Galileo Galilei ~~it~~ did not invent the laws of motion used in modern physics textbooks; the laws of motion were developed by Isaac Newton.

2. Stephen Hawking did not carry out laboratory experiments on radioactive elements; these experiments are attributed to Marie Curie.

3. Louis Pasteur was not the first person to discover penicillin; this discovery is attributed to Alexander Fleming.

4. Ada Lovelace didn't build a fully functioning computer.

5. Alexander Fleming did not discover penicillin while developing a vaccine for tuberculosis; he accidentally discovered it after ~~finding~~ noticing the development of mold on his petri dish.

Task 4 (continuation):

Paragraph 6:

After some of her straightforward friends have accused her of cheating, Clara realized that she must have been wrong to prioritise her public image over her future. Once she joined her new school abroad she finally felt valued and not taken for granted. Learning in a salubrious environment and acquiring new friends felt rewarding, but most importantly, thanks to her choice, she will have gotten into a great university by next year.
