Task 4.

Paragraph 2.

At the back of her mind this accidental opportunity seemed a reasonable and flawless addition to her educational achievements. Yet Clara had a grasp that sooner or later the mistake would be spotted. If someone turns a blind eye, the programme in her biography would become useless. After a thought, the solution had not been invented. Clara needed to share her fears with someone.

Paragraph 4.

Nevertheless, she did want to forget about the hectic school schedule for a couple of days and join the programme. In spite of the classmates who had not fully counted on Clara to accept the application, she did it in one go just the moment she stepped home. She was on the verge of reporting a mistake when sudden willingness to prove true 'safety' stopped her.

Paragraph 6.

The classmates had no doubt Clara ^{must} took the opportunity for granted as she had already gained indispensable experience, ~~for the future~~. Teachers' attitude did not feel as rewarding as it used to. One of her classmates was so straightforward that accused Clara of concealing the truth. By the end of the day, Clara will have ^{nearly} reached the point of leaving school. As fate would have it, a new message changed everything...

Task 5.

1. The term "level-headed" refers to the straightforward but reliable and fair state of mind.
2. The phrase "vicious circle" means a never-ending cycle of inevitably appearing problems one by one in a period of time.
3. The "bugbear" is an emotionally or physically taxing issue, which is hard to overcome.
4. "A tall order" can be explained as something that poses a formidable challenge and stays a pressing issue for long.

5. "Heyday" refers to the beginning, establishment or the setting of something relatively new, the start.

Task 6.
