paragraph 2

In the email that he received there was a lot of aggressive talk done by the director of a company that opposed Oliver's company. It was mostly corporate brag like multiple sentences about a drop in revenue or how once in a blue moon a worker in that company failed to file a simple report. According to the email grammatical mistakes in that report became the final straw so he fired that worker and wanted ~~me~~ ^{Oliver} in his element instead.

paragraph 4

Although Oliver felt pathetic and unworthy of his invitation because he was invited to be a top manager, he still accepted it to make ends meet.

Now, he steps in the office building, full of expectations that ~~turned~~ will turn true later and continue to be true to this day by and large. The first human that he met was his ~~director~~ new director who greeted him ~~Oliver~~ warmly, asked him if he would want to have a meeting with the team and then invited him in the main office. Little did he know, the team already awaited for him there.

paragraph 6
Oliver

~~He~~ decided to accept the offer. ~~Can he now~~ And he cannot imagine now how better his future could have been if he didn't. His old company skyrocketed in value and revenue while this new company crumbled and stayed a poth because it used ~~old~~ reluctant amounts of expensive tech. Every worker from the new team tried to take advantage of our poor Oliver! He is in fact still annoyed by this whole situation as he tries to write things out. "Check before you make such an important choice!" is what he now says to his friends and family.
