Paragraph 2.

Despite the fact that it was a golden opportunity, Clara turned a blind eye on the private group and decided to leave it later. But at the back of her mind Clara didn't refuse this chance. "If my parents had taught me to be risky, I wouldn't hesitate and miss the chance now", Clara thought. She hoped that she would have another opportunity sooner or later.

Paragraph 4.

That day was the day when Clara's mindset was changed. After hearing that conversation at school Clara did make up her mind about the programme and applied her documents in one go. Being on the verge of emotions, Clara understood that life would become hectic, interesting and memorable only after one's actions. For the whole day Clara ~~couldn't~~ had one thought: "I have ~~long~~ made the right decision".

Paragraph 6.

Eventually, Clara had the time of her life during the programme. She was going straight forward to her goals so she must get some rewarding benefits like a ~~sub~~ scholarship after she will have left school. Clara understood the importance of risks and actions. So the moral of the story is that it's no use of taking ~~the~~ golden opportunities for granted and waiting for other chances.
