Paragraph 2.

Suddenly, her mentor called her: „Clara, your documents have already been sent to us, we are waiting for your final decision”.
Clara wondered if she would still be offered the opportunity if it hadn't been for her engagement in numerous projects.

Accepting the fact that the organisation probably turned a blind eye at her mediocre academic performance, she went on to search some information about ~~the~~ the programme.

Paragraph 4.

The next day was pretty hectic for Clara. She had already searched for the essentials that she was ready to bag in one go, when, suddenly, her behaviour became rather mercurial. She started to rushingly discuss the programme with her closest. Eventually, she became so frustrated that she was on the verge of ditching the programme, though, in the end, she did ~~see~~ accept the offer.

Paragraph 6.

Her mentor put her at ease by giving a straightforward answer. „By the time you arrive at our camp, you will have forgotten about this cesspool of cordem”, he said. Clara inferred that the mentor was ~~pro~~ probably right, as he must have experienced this before. After that she concluded that ditching such a rewarding programme would mean taking such opportunities for granted and, finally, decided to follow mentor's advice.
