Paragraph 2

It occurred to her that if she turns a blind eye to the existence of the message, she wouldn't have to make her mind on the matter of replying to it. However, as the day went on Clara had the newfound problem at the back of her mind at all times. She knew that the decision had to be made sooner or later.

Paragraph 4

She had never felt so offended before and was on the verge of tears. The fact that her classmate just assumed what her decision would be made her hectic. She did want to join the programme and she did want to improve university prospects! Clara typed out a message confirming her interest and sent it all in one go. It somehow felt like proving herself she is worthy.

Paragraph 6

The next day her classmates were ~~very~~ extremely straightforward with her and said that she must have had everything given on a gold plate to her considering how much she takes for granted. Clara understood where they were coming from. It will have been rewarding for anyone to get into the programme. By this point Clara knew she was in the wrong. Clara ~~hoped~~ just hoped she won't make this mistake again.
