Paragraph 2:

Oliver was surprised as he got emails once in a blue moon. As for the previous one, he had received it about 3 months before this. He thought that if he had known the author of the message, he would have read it. On the first sight he ~~was~~ hadn't, so it wasn't in his element. Then he mentioned his school friend name in the email address and it was the final straw to check the message.

Paragraph 4:

Neither was he scared nor was he sad. ~~Oliver~~ ~~has been~~ 'I have been hardly making ends meet. I have to change something about it', told Oliver.

The proposal was about being a member of the new company which had been already established by Oliver's friend. He understood that he can be useful by and large but only pathetic thoughts made him confused.

Paragraph 6:

Oliver accepted the proposal and became a member of the company 'Posh' and took an advantage of it. Now he is rich and popular. However, he regrets not changing his life before.

'I'm always so scared to start something new', Oliver thought. 'I can have found new job before but I didn't'.
Fortunately, I get the point that ^{only} I'm reluctant ~~to~~ ^{to} my life'.
