Paragraph 2.

It was a job offer from an investment company, that Oliver had never heard about before. Who knows, maybe if he hadn't checked his email that day he would have never learned about it. Such coincidences happen once in a blue moon. Oliver was skeptical about accepting it at first, but ~~the promised salary was the final straw~~ because he was in his element, working in a small office, but the promised salary was the final straw.

Paragraph 4.

Oliver had been living a pathetic life, always being afraid to take a risk. Not only did he struggle to make ends meet, but he also was not fulfilled with his ^{actions} life. The offer was by and large the best opportunity to change something in his life. Oliver started imagining how successful he would become after accepting the job, and ^{shortly} ~~slowly~~ after he fell asleep.

Paragraph 6

The CEO asked Oliver to create a virus program that would gather private information from their customers' accounts. "They are being ridiculous!", ~~the~~ Oliver thought, reluctant to create a program that would take advantage of other people's data. He realised that he could have done something useful instead of coming there, and rejected the offer from such a posh and dishonest company.
