Paragraph 2

Identifying weird emails had never been in Oliver's element, but this one was standing out. If it hadn't been sent from the governmental email address, from which people receive something once in a blue moon, Oliver would have reported it as spam. Email contained an offer to participate in a top-secret innovative technology project, a date, place, some unfamiliar names and, the final straw, a promise of a huge salary.

Paragraph 4

Oliver has been sitting in his bed all night deep in thought. If only had he been braver. A sudden thought flashed through his mind. His parents, who were barely able to make ends meet. Oliver's pathetic salary was, by and large, sufficient, but not enough to help them. If Oliver accepts the offer, he will get his parents the money they are in need of.

Paragraph 6

It has been two years since that fateful choice. At first Oliver felt like life took advantage of him making him an internet governmental spy. But it was push to complain when his parents were happy. Of course, ~~the~~ jobs can be better than this one, and even though leaders are always putting the team at risk, even though Oliver is sometimes reluctant to accept it, he loves his new life.
