Task 4.

Paragraph 2

Miracles like this are to happen once in a blue moon. Like a blue-rose on a stark blackthorn winter day, the email has warmed Oliver's soul with a privity of hope. He thought of finally being in his element, and his heart skipped a beat. If ~~only~~ Oliver had received the email earlier, probably he would have replied instantly, but years and hearthstone talks changed him, and the final straw became a challenge.

Paragraph 4.

Poor Oliver had been wondering for the whole night and felt pathetic for himself in the early morning, getting ready to meet another copied day with a cup of "five-cent instant coffee". Time ^{hours} after passed. By and large, the blue-rose had closed, and the time to decide has been emerging. If not made the ends meet, such a coward he would be!

Paragraph 6.

~~Even~~ Sitting in a posh ~~prostitute~~ ~~leather~~ armchair, Oliver was doubting. If only he could return ^{back} to his twenties, when he had been ~~strong~~ ~~and~~ ~~reluctant~~! Unfortunately, there was no time to wonder ~~any more~~: the director glared at him ~~waiting~~ waiting for Oliver's decision, while the voices of the past tried to burn the bread of his confidence. The boss is always shouting, colleagues are ^{permanently} ~~always~~ gossiping, coffee is reminding of ~~what~~. No more longer. He ~~struck~~ ~~his~~ ~~hand~~ with a new boss, taking an advantage of new tide. →

It was time to take an advantage of new life.
